Models of Child Health Appraised

(A Study of Primary Healthcare in 30 European countries)

Background → Children are a fifth of Europe's population; they are citizens, future workers, future parents and carers, and the future elderly population. Yet they are dependent on society providing effective primary care, which provides some 90% of all health contact, and until the MOCHA project, there has been little research into how well current services do this.

Models of Child Health Appraised
(A Study of Primary Healthcare in 30 European countries)

Six Conclusions → →

- 1) Primary care for children in each country comprises many components; their cohesion as a system is determined more by their accessibility, capacity, and relationship than by their style (such as general or paediatrician primary care practitioner).
- 2) Effectiveness is primarily determined by access, workforce, service coordination and continuity, inter-sectoral governance, sociocultural linkage, and financing. However, robust appraisal is hampered by the lack of comparative data.
- 3) Optimal primary care for children is child-centric, equitable, proactive, integrated with specialist, social care and education services, and based on (and yielding) robust evidence.

Models of Child Health Appraised (A Study of Primary Healthcare in 30 European countries)

The integration among primary care and educative services seems a crucial issue at this time. I observed that health services at school are not very present across the European countries (we had many difficulties in looking for a speaker about his topic for PNAE Congress).

From Maria Brenner → I think this is an excellent idea and it would be an excellent follow up from the MOCHA project. ... I was involved in a similar survey a number of years ago in the United Arab Emirates and have a number of previously validated tools that we can examine for content validity in the European context.

Still our proposal is a survey about the health services in the school (all levels), especially considering paediatric nursing in the school

What do you think of this proposal?

Who would be interested in collaborate in this project?

THANK YOU
